Generated: 27 July, 2025, 08:43

Digging deeper into the stats only brings more pai Posted by alisawhite123 - 2020/10/21 14:10

font size=-1>
We&re six weeks into this NFL season. We ve seen enough so far to start making some broad-strokes judgments, analyses that rely on data rather than gut feelings. And it so in that spirit that I offer this utterly logical take:
lt&s time to fire the entire NFC East into the sun.
 lbr/>No, l&m serious. Pack em all in. Dallas, Philly, the Giants, Washington load em up and shoot em into orbit. Forfeit all the rest of their games * it*s not like they were going to win much of them anyway and give their playoff spot to, I don t know, Alabama or something.
 This is a division that s incompetent (New York), infuriating (Washington), indecisive (Phiiladelphia) and incomprehensible (Dallas). New York appears utterly directionless; Washington is just a swampy mess that not even Ron Rivera can clean up; Philadelphia has suffered through decimating injuries; and Dallas clearly lost its heart and soul when it lost Dak Prescott. All four teams combined have five wins. That s the same as the Seahawks, Bears, Steelers, Ravens, Titans and Chiefs. Again: the Chicago Bears have won as many games this year as the entire NFC East.

The division is a combined 5-18-1. To get the division above. 500, every single member of the NFC East would have to win every single game from now to Week 11, in mid-December.

only two wins: Dallas over Atlanta, which was a gift from the Falcons, and Philly with a five-point victory over San Francisco, which is 3-3 on the season. Yes, the best opponent anyone in the division has beaten doesn t even have a winning record.
br/> The NFC East is the only division in football that is completely underwater • in other words, every team has totaled fewer points on the year than their opponents. The average point differential across the division for the season is -46. The Eagles are the best of this bunch, and even they have scored 34 fewer points than their opponents.

 shopusacigarettes.com]Online Cigarettes Store USA
>cfont =========

